

The Guardian
28 Oct.

Four more years of Donald Trump ...

... is a real possibility. America faces an epic choice in November, and the result will have global repercussions for democracy, progress and solidarity for generations. Transatlantic ties, superpower relations and the climate emergency are all in the balance. Abortion, healthcare access, gender equality, and racial justice in the US are at risk – issues that disproportionately impact the lives of women, minorities and those on lower income.

In these chaotic, perilous times, an independent, truth-seeking news organisation like the Guardian is essential. With dozens of journalists in the US, we are dedicated to bringing readers like you a clear, international perspective on the world's foremost power.

Millions are flocking to the Guardian for open, independent, quality news every day, and readers in 180 countries around the world now support us financially. Thank you from joining us today from Italy.

We believe everyone deserves access to trustworthy information. That's why we choose to keep our reporting open for all readers, regardless of where they live or what they can afford to pay.

The Guardian has no shareholders or billionaire owner, meaning our journalism is free from bias and vested interests – this makes us different. Our editorial independence and autonomy allows us to provide fearless investigations and analysis of those with political and commercial power. We can give a voice to the oppressed and neglected, and help bring about a brighter, fairer future. Your support protects this.

With just weeks to go until the presidential election, our eyes are on Washington. If there were ever a time to join us, it is now. You have the power to support us through these volatile economic times and enable our journalism to reach more people, in all countries.

Every contribution, however big or small, makes a difference. Support the Guardian from as little as €1 – and it only takes a minute. Thank you.